Who Wants What: Making Music That Matters • Workshop Discussion

Whether you write music for albums, libraries, or a "work-for-hire" project like films, TV or video game scores, the styles you show as your best work will open some doors, and close others. Most producers and directors aren't looking for a "jack-of-all-trades". The desire for certain musical styles is ever changing and evolving. What makes one piece of music or one composer more attractive than another? A conversation about style, genre, production technique and opportunities with Jeff Rona.
